Suggested Annual Flower Varieties for 2010

Every spring countless homeowners deluge the Cornell Cooperative Extension office with the question, "Which annuals bloom continuously throughout the growing season and perform well overall for the Long Island region?" Hopefully, seed or young transplants of certain recommended varieties can be purchased at local garden centers. Unfortunately, many varieties are often unavailable locally and must be ordered through mail-order seed catalogs. If you elect this course, be certain to order early to obtain those you want for 2010. This is especially true of new introductions, where the seed is usually in short supply for the first year or two.

The following is a list of annual varieties suggested for the Long Island area. Some of these are new introductions and All-America Selections (AAS) award winners, while others are of another era but certainly adaptable. They have been grown and evaluated under low maintenance conditions in the display garden located at the Cornell Cooperative Extension of Nassau County headquarters. Those listed proved to be superior in all aspects, i.e. continuous bloom, uniformity of flower and habit and ease of maintenance. Due to the number of new and unknown varieties available, plus our limited space for trialing, many have not been grown and evaluated. The varieties listed are merely suggestions when seeking out outstanding varieties.
